Awakening to inflation

Higher prices can chip away at your savings, so position your money to stay a step ahead.

Monetary inflation hasn't been much of a concern for so long that it may seem like a foreign concept to some people. Before the 1990s, wild swings in inflation were more common, but for the past 25 years annual rates have hovered close to two per cent, with few notable fluctuations. What a difference a year can make.

When widescale reaction to the global pandemic began in March 2020, the Canadian economy entered uncharted waters. Global stock markets experienced their biggest drop in years, unemployment and business closures began to rise and supply chain interruptions soon contributed to a downward trend for the inflation rate, which eventually reached 0.72 per cent. However, it didn't stay that low for long.

The Bank of Canada boosted the economy by injecting massive amounts of money into the financial system through the purchase of bonds and other assets (known as quantitative easing) and lowering long-term interest rates. In late 2020, vaccine development gained ground and a return to higher consumer spending appeared on the horizon, stoking confidence in an economic recovery. An upswing of activity drove Canada's inflation rate to 3.7 per cent in July 2021 – the highest level seen in a decade.[1]

What is inflation?

Inflation is the financial term that describes a rise in the Consumer Price Index (CPI), a measurement that reflects average changes in the cost of the typical goods and services purchased by households. The CPI is published monthly by the Bank of Canada.

When the economy gains strength, prices often go up. Today, as the pandemic recedes and the economy re-energizes, inflation is being pushed higher by a combination of factors. These include a return to brisk consumer spending, a recovering labour market and the loosening of many COVID-19 restrictions. However, they are driving up the price of everything from furniture to cars to coffee.

Effects of inflation

Popping into a grocery store, gas station or coffee shop today means paying higher prices than a year ago. And those aren't the only places where you'll face rising costs. You may also see them at the bank. This is due to the relationship between interest rates and inflation. When the Bank of Canada wants to reduce the rate of inflation, it raises interest rates, which raises the cost of borrowing money in the form of mortgages, loans, and lines of credit.

As economic conditions continue to improve, some economists speculate that regulators may be ready to raise interest rates sometime in 2022. When this occurs, Canadians can expect to make higher payments due to higher interest rates on their debts. This means households may have to look closely at reining in their spending and paying down high-interest debt. Here's some information that illustrates the effect interest rate hikes can have on a typical mortgage.

Handling inflation

It's debatable whether the economy has entered a temporary or a prolonged period of inflation. While the experts monitor and measure all the factors that affect inflation in one way or another, consumers can continue to stay focused on our long-term goals and re-examine what we can do to make up the shortfall in our purchasing power. If the average annual inflation rate is, for example, 2.5 per cent, a person needs to generate a return of at least 2.5 per cent on their money or risk losing some financial ground to rising prices. Since very few savings and other types of cash accounts, such as GIC's pay anywhere near this amount of interest these days, investing in a diversified portfolio with a balanced selection of stocks and bonds may offer the best protection against inflation.

Another option to consider is taking a gradual approach towards investments to benefit from dollar-cost averaging. Making regular investment purchases, buys more units when prices are low and fewer units when prices are high, effectively lowering the average cost and providing the potential for greater growth over the long term. Of course, this approach may be more beneficial to people with a longer investment timeline, as investment strategies for older investors and retirees may differ.

In any case, it's important to also recognize that most investments come with certain levels of risk – and to determine your own tolerance for risk with the help of an advisor and a few key questions.

Inflation and retirement

Retired people and those who are planning their retirement are likely keeping a close eye on inflation rates and what they may mean to their retirement savings. If higher rates persist for some time, not only would inflation affect retirees' ability to afford everyday expenses, but also some important necessities, such as medication or some health care procedures.

Creating a realistic retirement budget and reducing spending can help to limit the potential harm posed by rising prices, but the answer is the same in just about every scenario – to beat inflation, even when it comes to minor increases, look at leveraging your investments.

Consider this example: a typical balanced portfolio holds 60 per cent of its value in stocks and 40 per cent in bonds. Assume you earn a five per cent annual average return, and that when you enter retirement you initially withdraw four per cent of your portfolio, adjusted for inflation that averages two per cent annually. Over the next 25 years, the odds against running out of money are 85 per cent. But if inflation climbs another percentage point higher, to three per cent, those odds fall to 72 per cent. If inflation were to rise to a consistent four per cent, the odds then fall to about 50-50.

Realizing how a spike in inflation can draw value away from retirement savings and income should be a signal to contact us to reassess your investment strategy to ensure that you have enough assets to continue to support your standard of living. On the other hand, retirees should know that some programs are automatically cost-adjusted for inflation, including Old Age Security and some defined benefit pension plans.

Drinking Water Quality and Compliance Annual Notice to Consumers Town of Rocanville

Introduction

The Water Security Agency and the Ministry of Environment requires that at least once each year waterworks owners provide notification to consumers of the quality of water produced and supplied as well as information on the performance of the waterworks in submitting samples as required by a Minister's Order or Permit to Operate a Waterworks. The following is a summary of the Town of Rocanville's water quality and sample submission compliance record for the January 1 – December 31, 2021 time period. This report was completed on March 23, 2022. Readers should refer to Water Security Agency's Municipal Drinking Water Quality Monitoring Guidelines, November 2002, EPB 202 for more information on minimum sample submission requirements and the meaning of type of sample. Permit requirements for a specific waterworks may require more sampling than outlined in the decontamination monitoring guidelines. If consumers need more information on the nature and significance of specific water tests, for example, "what is the significance of Selenium in a water supply", more detailed information is available from: http://www.hc-sc.gc.ca/ewh-scmt/pubs/water-eau/index_e.html.

Chemical – Health Category

All waterworks serving less than 5000 persons are required to submit water samples for SE's Chemical Health category once every 2 years. The Chemical Health category includes analysis for arsenic, barium, boron, cadmium, chromium, fluoride, lead, nitrate, selenium and uranium.

The last sample for Chemical Health analysis was submitted on November 21, 2018. Sample results indicated that the provincial drinking water quality standards were not exceeded.

The last sample for General Chemical analysis was required on 2018 and submitted on November 21, 2018. Sample results indicated that there were no exceedences of the provincial aesthetic objectives for the General Chemical category.

More information on water quality and sample submission performance may be obtained from:
