Snap decisions and investing don't mix

How to recognize biases to avoid financial mistakes.

It's not always easy to make wise investment decisions, and this is especially true during uncertain times. When we're stressed, we tend to make choices more intuitively and are less likely to spend time carefully sifting through all the pros and cons. The trouble is that intuitive snap decisions won't necessarily help us meet our long-term financial goals. Taking a moment to step back and work to understand the cognitive biases that may steer us in the wrong direction can help us make better decisions about our finances and reach the goals we are striving to achieve.

What are cognitive biases? Cognitive biases are underlying belief systems that affect decision making. A long time ago, our ancestors' brains evolved to create shortcuts to conserve energy and act fast in the face of danger. Back then, spending too much time considering a threat meant the difference between life and death. Today, our brains still use those ancient survival techniques, especially when we feel threatened by something, like volatility and falling markets.

Understanding our cognitive biases can help shed light on the choices we make about everything from whom we choose as friends to which job offer we accept to what we buy and how we invest

A deeper dive on common biases
 Behavioural economics is the study of how investors make decisions related to money. Research in this field has identified many biases that commonly influence the financial choices people make. Here are just a few.

Overconfidence The overconfidence bias comes into play when people overestimate their knowledge or abilities. In investing, they may think they understand the markets better than they do and that, if things don't work out as expected, they will be able to escape bad outcomes. This bias can lead people to take on too much risk, hold overly concentrated portfolios and trade too frequently. It may also make people ignore advice from others, including professional advisors.

Loss aversion People generally feel the pain of loss more than the joy of gain, and this bias is known as loss aversion. It can cause people to keep money "safe" in a savings account that earns less than the rate of inflation, rather than investing in markets that can provide the potential for higher gains but also the potential for losses. As a result of this bias, investors can miss out on opportunities to build their wealth and achieve goals.

Illusion of control When things feel chaotic, people often get anxious and look for ways to regain a sense of control. In response to feeling that they are powerless, people may decide that doing anything is better than doing nothing. This may lead them to ignore well-thought-out strategies and take unnecessary, irrational actions. Such actions can provide the illusion of control, but it isn't real control, and it can derail long-term plans.

Representativeness The representativeness bias is behind people's focus on recent investment returns as an indicator of future performance. We tend to assume current market conditions, current headlines and even current weather can help make sense of the future – but what's happening right now isn't necessarily representative of what will happen next. Prioritizing too slim a sampling of data can lead to the wrong conclusions.

Anchoring People tend to become attached to the first piece of information they get on a subject. That introduction becomes the anchor against which they evaluate all subsequent information. For example, let's say someone encounters an investment on a day when it is valued at $10 per unit. If the investment rises to $20, it will seem expensive even if it's still a good value based on underlying fundamentals. The anchoring bias can lead to decisions based on an impulsive first impression.

Overcoming biases with a trusted second opinion Recognizing the biases that influence our decisions is an important first step – but even when we know they're there, it can still be hard to sidestep them. Asking an advisor for a professional opinion can help promote rational, thoughtful, bias-resistant decisions and protect an investor's ability to reach long-term financial objectives.

Specifically, an advisor can:

- Provide simple, precise, direct explanations and advice
- Outline the consequences of making (or not making) a decision
- Compare the potential outcomes of lower-risk and higher-risk strategies
- Make different plans for long-term and short-term assets
- Give concrete examples with real numbers to illustrate different scenarios
- Offer context and a far-sighted, long-term perspective
- Help connect investments to specific lifestyle goals

Financial decisions made today can have a profound effect on future financial well-being, so they need to be as well informed and unbiased as possible – even (perhaps especially) when times are tough and stress can interfere with decision making.

BLUE MOON MARQUEE

Wednesday, March 02, 2022 7:30 PM
Moosomin Community Theatre

Blue Moon Marquee currently makes their home in an island shack on the coast of the Salish Sea in British Columbia. A.W. Cardinal and Jasmine Colette (a.k.a. "Badlands Jass") write and perform original compositions influenced by early blues, swing, jazz and ragtime including artists such as Lonnie Johnson, Howlin' Wolf, Memphis Minnie, and Django Reinhardt. Blue Moon Marquee's passionate performances and smoldering onstage chemistry is their trademark. It's something that enralls audiences from back-room bars to festival stages, to velvet-seated theatres. Jasmine Colette, the rhythm section, not only commands the upright bass but also brings the swing with her feet playing drums all while singing harmonies. A.W. Cardinal's distinctive thick and smoky vocals barrel out like a raging bull. His guitar crackles with the swinging energy of jazz-tinged blues. Recent nominations include Blues Artist of the Year, 2021 Western Canadian Music Awards; Indigenous Songwriter of the Year, 2021 Canadian Folk Music Awards; Indigenous Artist of the Year, 2018 WCMA; New Artist of the Year, 2013s 6 Maple Blues Awards (2016). Known for their authenticity, this versatile act presents as duo, trio or quartet.

Food Share says Thank You

On behalf of the Food Bank Committee, we would like to thank everyone who gave food donations and cash donations to the food bank this last year. The last year has been challenging for everyone including the Food Bank program. Covid 19 restrictions have forced us to make some changes as far as distributions of food hampers went but all in all the program ran well.

We had a successful Christmas Hamper distribution once again this year. We gave out 16 hampers in the Rocanville and Welwyn areas.

We would like to thank:

Nutrien Rocanville Potash once again for purchasing the gifts for the children and for the gift cards.

Conexus Credit Union for the opportunity for people to leave items under the Christmas Tree for the food bank. Very successful again this year.

The schools, in Rocanville and French Immersion in St Lazare, Blue Berry Kitchen, the Rocanville churches who gave items throughout the year.

To all who gave food items and cash donations, and the list is long we say thank you.

48- Food share hampers were delivered throughout the year.

16 - Christmas Hampers were sent out.

Our shelves are full. Thank you
