

Financial roadblocks

How emotions can create barriers to financial wellness.

IT MAY NOT SEEM IMMEDIATELY OBVIOUS, but financial wellness is a key element of our overall physical and mental health. When people feel financially well, they exercise more, eat more fruits and vegetables, and get health checkups more regularly. They tend to worry less about money. However, according to a recent study, 40 percent of Canadians feel financially unwell. They are less knowledgeable about investments than their financially well peers, are less likely to feel prepared to deal with a financial emergency, and are highly unlikely to be on track to reaching their retirement goals.

A follow up study reveals that over half of individuals who seek professional help to deal with life issues also have financial challenges. However, only one-third of counsellor's survey found that their clients saw a connection between their finances and other problems. It's difficult to talk about money issues. People who are financially unwell may have emotional barriers preventing them from gaining control over their finances. Those barriers – or feelings – include embarrassment, shame, fear and guilt. They may worry about being judged or stigmatized for their money problems. And these emotions can keep them from dealing with their financial issues or seeking help.

Clearing the path to financial wellness
Money issues are not uncommon, nor are they an indication of failure. The same way individuals take steps to improve their physical health; they can take steps to improve their financial wellness. With the right support, Canadians can make progress towards better managing their money.

An Advisor can provide guidance around budgeting, managing debt and investing. He or she can help with planning for retirement and preparing for financial emergencies. What's more, an advisor can help an individual stay on track and avoid the emotional roadblocks that can hinder success. Each step can bring person closer to reaching financial health.

To create a plan specific to your goals, or if you have concerns about financial situation speak to your advisor.

UNDERSTANDING EMOTIONAL BIAS

Emotions influence the way people think and act when it comes to their money. When those emotions are negative, such as guilt or embarrassment, they can create barriers to achieving financial wellness. But that's not the only way emotions can affect finances. Emotion biases are subtle preconceptions that can have a big impact on goals like saving for retirement. Even seasoned investors can experience emotional bias. For example, if the stock market starts to drop, someone who gets the "jitters" and rushes to sell stock is acting on emotion, not logic. Here are four key emotional biases to watch for:

Loss aversion: No one likes to lose. In fact, people tend to feel the pain of losing more than the joy of gaining. Any investor who has watched the value of his or her investments drop and then sold at a low point has fallen pretty to this bias.

Confirmation bias.

People are naturally drawn to information that agrees with their opinions or wants. That can become a concern if someone has too much stock in one company based solely on a good opinion of its products. As another example, employees may accumulate a lot of stock in the business they work for, instead of diversifying to balance their risk.

Recency bias.

This is the belief that what happened in the past will continue to happen.

For example, investors might dive into a stock just as it peaks, simply because the stock performed well the years before.

Herd mentality

This familiar thought process can take hold when investors don't want to be left out of a trend. But before joining the herd, think about whether it's the right investment for you, or the right time to jump in.

Rocanville Economic Development would like to encourage Rocanville residents to take the $50 challenge.

The Town of Rocanville consists of approximately 460 home owners. If each home owner spent an extra $50 a week within our community that would generate an extra $1,196,000.00 each year for our local economy.

Love Where

You Live

to build, strengthen and grow your community

take the $50 challenge

If every reader of The World-Spectator spends $50 a week locally instead of in the city or online, that will inject $31,000,000 into our local economy each year.

$31 MILLION!

what's $50 a week?

- It's a case of paper for your business bought locally rather than in the city
- It's one meal out in the local area, not in Brandon, Yorkton, or Regina.
- It's one piece of clothing bought in a local store and not online.
- It's one less weekend trip to the city over the course of the year, with that weekend spent checking out something in the local area instead—the Sportsplex, the cross-country ski trails, the snowmobile trails, Asessippi or the Moose Mountains.

Take the $50 challenge and support your community!

One Book, One School, One Community

Our entire school is going to be reading the book "The Miraculous Journey of Edward Tulane" in February. Everyday reading pages will be assigned and they will be followed up with a trivia question the next morning. | Community members are encouraged to read along and follow the daily trivia which will be posted on the Rocanville Recreation Page. More details and books will be shared around the community in January.

Let's get our whole community talking about the same book and engaged in literacy for enjoyment because nothing beats a cold winter evening than a good book!
