Insurance basics

What types of protection are right for you?

Over the years, insurance products have evolved to become more specialized with added features and riders. That makes it possible for individuals to build increasingly customized plans – but it also means it takes a little more work to understand the various solutions available to protect Canadians from different risks.

Insurance falls into two major categories:

- Life insurance, which pays a benefit when the insured person dies, includes term life insurance, whole life insurance and universal life insurance.
- Living benefits, which pay a benefit under specific circumstances during the insured's lifetime, include critical illness insurance and disability insurance.

These different types of insurance can be combined to help individuals and families meet many high-priority goals, such as covering immediate expenses after death, building a legacy for the next generation, or protecting income in case of illness or injury.

What is a rider? A rider is a clause in an insurance contract that provides additional protection at an additional cost.

Here are just a few examples:

- a child protection rider that adds coverage for a child to an adult's policy
- a total disability waiver rider that allows the insured person to skip premium payments while disabled and unable to work
- a return of premium rider that pays back all premiums if the insured person doesn't experience a covered situation, such as a critical illness

What can term life insurance add to your plan?

Term life insurance is the simplest type of life insurance, and it's often available quickly through an easy application process. It provides protection for a set period of time – the "term." The term may last for a fixed number of years (e.g., 10 years) or until the insured person reaches a certain age (e.g., age 65). At the end of the term, it may be possible to renew the policy or convert it to a different type of life insurance. Should an individual convert their term policy to a permanent policy, underwriting won't be required unless they increase their coverage.

One way to use term life insurance:

Taran and Pari have 20 years left on their mortgage and want to make sure that, if one of them were to die, their house would be paid off in full.

They can insure both their lives with a 20-year term life insurance policy, setting the death benefit at the full value of the remaining balance on their mortgage. They will also have the added flexibility of being able to reduce their amount of insurance in the future, as they pay down their mortgage.

What can whole life insurance add to your plan?

Whole life insurance is permanent insurance that provides guaranteed protection for life, as long as premium payments stay up to date. In addition, some whole life insurance build a tax-advantaged "cash value" within the policy that the insured person can access while alive. On death, beneficiaries receive the death benefit, which is an amount equal to the original face amount, plus any paid-up insurance that was purchased.

One way to use whole life insurance:

Min doesn't want her three children to have to pay for her funeral and cover the taxes on her estate after she dies.

She considers term life insurance, but she also likes the idea of a policy that will protect her for her lifetime with guaranteed premiums and accumulate a cash value she can withdraw if needed. She chooses a whole life insurance policy that allows her to pay all her premiums in 20 years, with a death benefit sufficient to cover funeral and tax costs on death.

What is paid-up insurance?

Available as a dividend option on a whole life policy, paid-up insurance is additional coverage that a policyholder can purchase using the policy's dividends. It allows policyholders to increase their death benefit, and in some policies, the living benefit cash value.

What can universal life insurance add to your plan?

Like whole life insurance, universal life insurance is permanent insurance that blends life insurance with tax-advantaged investing. It generally offers even more flexibility and features than whole life insurance, including a wider range of investment choices for the "account value" – such as investments linked to equity market growth. It is possible to access the account value during life. Alternatively, the insured person can choose to include the investment portion of the policy in the death benefit to leave an even larger tax-free legacy to beneficiaries.

One way to use universal life insurance:

Elian wants to make sure his two adult children receive equal shares of his estate. He plans to leave his cottage to his son, who spends a lot of time there with his young family, so he needs an equal-value asset to leave to his daughter. A universal life insurance policy will allow him to increase the death benefit over time by investing in a wide range of tax-preferred investments.

Aqua Energy—This class is a high energy class with lots of cardio.

Aqua Deep— This class is done almost entirely in the deep end. Floatation aids can be used.

You may have noticed the price increase for public swims at the Rocanville Aquatic Center. Please know that this decision was not made without some thought put into it. Each year the cost to keep our facility open increases. We have set the public swim rates to help compensate our expenses. Our rates are now comparable to other pools in our area. This year will also be a challenging year for our pool as we accommodate COVID restrictions and are allowed only a limited number in the pool. We hope that you can understand our reasoning for the price increase and still plan to take advantage of our fabulous facility.
